

It is critical that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Since the inception of the Indiana Telephone Privacy law, our household has gone from approximately 20 unsolicited calls per week to nearly zero. At least in the case of the state of Indiana, a 'it's not broke - don't try to fix it' approach is appropriate. If the FCC feels compelled to implement nation wide standards, it seems that any pre-existing state policies should have preference.
